"Between certainty and complete uncertainty there is a precious intermediate space—and it is in this intermediate space that our lives and our thoughts unfold."

(Carlo Rovelli)

Synopsis

What if you should come to know the world's end is just a few hours away? Like every year, a group of old friends celebrates a birthday in a seaside villa.

When they get the news, the time dividing them from the possible end seems to change its flow and suddenly feels fast yet endless. This summer night will transform their lives.

Director's Notes

When Paolo Costella and I read the same unusual book by Carlo Rovelli, titled "The Order of Time," we agreed to share our discovery by writing a film version of such a fascinating - if somewhat disturbing - text.

When I am so engrossed in reading to feel emotions arise, I want to pass them on to my audience, and I usually decide to make a movie about it. Paolo and I dove deep into stirring words like: "The whole of our physics, and science in general, is about how things develop "according to the order of time."

As HUMANS and part of the Universe, we embark on the journey of life without having chosen to do so. It just happens, as everything does, according to "The Order of Time."

I was lucky enough to find great actors to join me on this adventure: artists who can deliver an authentic interpretation of the vast array of emotions that this story required, finding a personal way to express fear, nostalgia, amazement, uncertainty, hope...

So is life truly a journey traced by the order of Time? Well, it certainly is quite a disquieting one.

Liliana Cavani

BIO-FILMOGRAPHY

LILIANA CAVANI

Cavani was born in Carpi (Modena) and holds a degree in Classical Studies from Bologna University and a diploma from the Experimental Cinematography Center in Rome. In 1962 she started directing relevant documentaries on critical matters, including A History of the Third Reich (1962,) The Stalin Era, Women of the Resistance (1963,) La casa in Italia (1964), Philippe Pétain: trial in Vichy, for which she won a Golden Lion at the Venice Film Festival in 1965. In 1966, she directed her first feature film, Francis of Assisi, starring Lou Castel. The film was screened at the Venice Film Festival and received a Valladolid Festival award for Best Film, bringing her notoriety. Throughout her career, Liliana Cavani portrayed historical figures whose example is still topical today, and that would offer a model of non-violent opposition to the establishment. One example is Galileo Galilei (1968,) a movie for the big screen nominated at the Venice Film Festival. The 17th-century conflict between science and religion, represented by Galileo and Giordano Bruno, alludes to the modern contrast between Power and individuals. In 1970, she directed the metaphorical The Year of the Cannibals, starring Pierre Clémenti and Britt Ekland, referring to the "cannibalism" of Power towards the antagonistic forces of society. The film was screened at the Quinzane in Cannes and the New York Festival, where it met with great success. 1971 marked the making of the TV movie The Guest, starring Lucia Bos. An investigation into mental illness, the film was selected for the Venice Film Festival. Milarepa (1973) focused on the mystical experience of a Tibetan hermit and was nominated at the Cannes Film Festival. She achieved worldwide recognition with the highly provocative The Night Porter (1974), starring Dirk Bogarde and Charlotte Rampling. The film follows the relationship between an SS officer and a young prisoner who meet again years after the war, and it analyzes how Power intertwines with the ambiguity of human nature. In 1977, she directed Beyond Good and Evil, about the relationship between Friedrich Nietzsche and Lou Andreas Salomé, and, in 1981, The Skin, based on Curzio Malaparte's novel and nominated at Cannes. In 1982, she was back in Venice with a film about mental insanity, Beyond the Door. Another international movie followed in 1985, The Berlin Affair, based on Tanizaki Jun'ichirō's novel and screened at the Berlin Film Festival. Dove siete? Io sono qui (1993) received a Coppa Volpi for Best Actress (Anna Bonaiuto,) while her thriller Ripley's Game, starring John Malkovich, premiered in Venice in 2002. In 1989 she released a new film on Francis of Assisi, starring Mickey Rourke, and screened in Cannes. Her short Clarisse (2012) a Premio Pasinetti in Venice. In the same year, she received a special David di Donatello. In 2022, Liliana Cavani's birthday was celebrated at the Ministry of Culture.

She will be awarded The Golden Lion for Career Achievement at the 80th Venice Film Festival.
